

HR Roundtable- Burnout to Breakthrough: Getting creative about wellness

According to the American Psychological Association (APA), 37% of employees say that employer-provided mental health resources can contribute to a better work environment. Employee assistance programs (EAPs) are a valuable tool to help improve an employer's bottom line. However, while research shows EAP services can successfully improve a range of employee issues associated with lower productivity, a low percentage of employees use them. The Cobb Chamber and SelectCobb invite you to join us as we hear a panel of experts discuss creative ways to promote employee wellness while improving a company's bottom line.
