

MAX MONDAYS: MARCH 18, 2024

MAX Mondays provides a central place to stay abreast of the many workforce happenings in our region and state. Special thanks to everyone for your submittals and efforts to keep our workforce development community informed!

MAX Minutes Walks Through Georgia's New Labor Exchange Platform – The WorkSource Georgia Portal – with Rhonda Waite, TCSG: On Friday, March 15th, Rhonda Waite, Director, Policy, Training & Compliance, with the Technical College System of Georgia (TCSG), reviewed the features of the WorkSource Georgia Portal for job seekers and employers. Through the portal, job seekers can explore careers, access education planning and financial aid resources, find training opportunities, prepare for employment, and search for a new job. Job seekers can also upload multiple resumes tailored to specific job postings and be alerted when jobs are posted that are a potential fit. Employers can post jobs, screen several suitable candidates, determine how well each job seeker matches the job requirements, and access labor market information and industry data to inform decision making. Waite provided a live demo of the portal's features and functionality. Click here for a recording.

REMINDER: MAX Academy on Trauma-Informed Care to Provide CEUs for Rehabilitation Counselors + Social Workers: The Commission on Rehabilitation Counselor Certification (CRCC) has approved the MAX Academy: Delivering Trauma-Informed Customer Care on March 27, 2024 as training that counts as continuing education hours (CEUs) for Certified Rehabilitation Counselors (CRCs). Special thanks to Goodwill of North Georgia for serving as the sponsor with the CRCC for this workshop. This training with Georgia State University not only provides 3.0 clock hours of continuing education for rehabilitation counselors, the CEUs can also be used to fulfill core hours or general continuing education requirements for license renewal for social workers and non-core related hours for marriage and family therapists and professional counselors. Special discount benefits available for MAX members. Click here to learn more and register.

MAX ALERT: Georgia Launches New Tool for Individuals and Employers to Receive Rapid Response Help: The Technical College System of Georgia's Office of Workforce Development administers the Rapid Response services for employers and individuals in the state of Georgia. These services are available for employers who are downsizing or at-risk for closure and for individuals affected by employment loss. TCSG has recently launched a Rapid Response online tool to make it easier for employers and individuals to access the help they need. Individuals who have been laid off and employers closing operations or laying off workers can visit www.GANewJob.com to connect to helpful resources. Click here to learn more.

REMINDER: MAX Annual Survey Moves to First Quarter: What Is Keeping You Up at Night?

How Can MAX Help?: The MAX Annual Survey is a vital tool for collecting your input on important workforce matters affecting the landscape for employers and job seekers in metro Atlanta. In addition, the advisement shared by workforce developers will inform how MAX can best serve the workforce community in the days ahead. The survey to inform our efforts in 2024 was initially launched in late 2023. Recognizing year-end and year-start are particularly busy times, the brief survey remains open to maximize the opportunity for input. Translation: If you have not already shared your input via this survey, we still want to hear from you! Click here to share your insights today!

ARE YOU A MAX MEMBER? If not, what are you waiting for? Join MAX and engage with a strong and dynamic network of workforce professionals who stand ready to provide peer-to-peer support and explore how to work jointly in best serving the job seeker and employer. - The Society for Human Resource Management (SHRM) is hosting a webinar on Claims Payment Integrity: Chipping Away at Your Workforce Health Care Spend on Wednesday, March 27th, starting at 2:00 PM. Balancing the rising costs of health care with employee benefit needs can be difficult. Plan sponsors can start by learning where to look for savings. Claims payment integrity is often undervalued, but it can play a critical role in delivering savings for plan sponsors and their employees. Partnering with a health plan carrier that provides best-in-class claims payment integrity solutions is key. Complexities with provider contracts, and the claim submission process increase the potential for inaccurate claims and payments. Best-in-class claims payment integrity programs reduce claim costs through all phases of the claim lifecycle. A robust claims payment integrity program will ensure that claims are paid based on nationally accepted billing policies (AMA, CMS), reducing fraud, waste, abuse and more. This webcast will dive into why, more than ever, claims payment integrity should be a priority for plan sponsors as they look to effectively manage their costs and those of their employees. In this session, you'll hear from Michael Bucci, Vice President of Sales Enablement; Matthew Harms, Head of National Business Development; and Peter Sanderson, Executive Director of Actuarial for Aetna National Accounts. WORKFORCE DEVELOPMENT INSIGHTS

- From Accenture: The harmony between people, tech and business is showing tensions, and society is in flux. Five trends explore the decline of customer obsession, the influence of generative AI, the stagnation of creativity, the balance of tech benefits and burden, and people's new life goals. Opportunity abounds for business and brands in the coming twelve months and beyond – read Accenture Life Trends 2024 to find out more. Click here to read more.
- From The Annie E. Casey Foundation: When compared to peers who are in school or working, opportunity youth are more likely to experience a range of challenges in adulthood, such as employment difficulties, low incomes, and poor physical and mental health. Conversely, youth with education and employment experience gain connections to good jobs, earnings, health care and other resources. Stable, caring relationships with adults are also key to helping young people navigate the hurdles of school, work, finances, and life as they transition to adulthood. Click here to read more.
- From The Aspen Institute: Over the past year, the volume and power of employee voice surprised many American business leaders. High-profile union organizing captured headlines to a degree not seen in many people's careers. Return to office policies opened difficult conversations about employee expectations of managers, workplaces, and work itself. Employees expect to have a say not only on traditional working conditions, but also in how the company responds to important societal and global challenges. And the wide array of issues that employees are weighing in on is exceedingly difficult for business leaders to track in real time. Click here to read more.
- From Brookings: The seeming disconnect between consumer sentiment and the state of the macroeconomy has been a defining characteristic of the post-COVID economy. By most widely accepted measures, the state of the macroeconomy is historically robust: The topline unemployment rate has remained below 4% for the past two years, economic growth has been steady and recovered pandemic-era losses, and inflation has retreated to historical norms. Click here to read more.

- From Center for American Progress: The United States has experienced a historically strong economic recovery from the COVID-19 recession, with more jobs and a larger inflation-adjusted gross domestic product (GDP) in 2023 than expected before the pandemic. GDP growth has been stronger in the United States than in other advanced economies, and the latest data show that U.S. inflation is among the lowest in the Group of Seven (G7) economies. For many families, however, these statistics only matter if they are reflected in higher real wages—that is, wages adjusted for cost of living—since that means purchasing power also rises. And the news on that front is also good: Many economists have pointed out that real wages for a typical worker today are higher than they were before the pandemic and are growing at about the pre-pandemic rate. Click here to read more.
- From Center on Budget and Policy Priorities: Many children and their custodial parents receive child support payments from non-custodial parents to help cover child-rearing costs. Child support can be a significant source of family income for families struggling to make ends meet. That is especially true for families receiving cash payments from the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) program, who receive benefits that still leave them at or below 60 percent of the federal poverty level in every state. However, child support payments often do not reach families participating in TANF. And even after they leave TANF, states still keep some of their child support payments. State child support policies typically prioritize reimbursing the state and federal government for TANF cash payments provided to families during times of need, rather than directing payments to the children for whom they are intended. States have policy options to direct more child support payments to families who receive or used to receive TANF assistance, but only half of states have chosen to exercise any of those options. Click here to read more.
- From Economic Policy Institute: Over the past decade, 15 states and the District of Columbia have enacted laws requiring employers to allow workers to earn paid sick time. As a result, the share of workers who have access to paid sick leave nationwide has increased over this time. However, lack of paid sick days is still a real problem for many workers—especially low-wage workers. Click here to read more.
- From the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta: In trying to find quality jobs and advance in their careers, participants exercised job autonomy and pursued credentials and skill-building. In some cases, individuals described securing better jobs and higher pay, but many did not. Varied experiences with exercising job autonomy and skill-building, along with the lack of reliable outcomes, indicate a possible disconnect between low-wage, sub-baccalaureate workers, and employment opportunities. Addressing this disconnect could improve the efficacy of workers' and job seekers' efforts to improve their outcomes and more broadly facilitate greater economic mobility among non-degreed workers. Click here to read more.

- From Gallup Workplace Insights: In 2024, employers and employees are heading for a relationship reset. This shift partly stems from changes in where and how people work. In 2019, 60% of remote-capable employees spent their week working fully on-site, whereas that figure has fallen to just 20% in 2023. But that's not the complete story. Nearly five in 10 U.S. employees work fully on-site in jobs that can't be hybrid or remote. And Gallup's research indicates that how employees are managed has about four times as much influence on employee engagement and wellbeing as their work location. Click here to read more.
- From the International Association of Workforce Professionals (IAWP): In a groundbreaking research report, Accenture, in collaboration with the American Association of People with Disabilities (AAPD), has unveiled compelling evidence that companies leading in disability inclusion outperform their peers financially. The report, titled "The Disability Inclusion Imperative," builds on the landmark 2018 study on disability inclusion in the United States, exploring the evolving landscape across 346 companies using the Disability Equality Index (DEI) as a benchmark. For workforce development professionals, this research offers critical insights into the undeniable benefits of fostering an inclusive workplace for individuals with disabilities. Click here to read more.
- From Jobs for the Future: Our nation's economy is at an inflection point. Employers are struggling to find qualified workers to fill critical job openings. Meanwhile, despite positive job growth and wage gain trends, recent polling and labor strikes suggest that many people in this country feel unsupported by the job market and overall economy, a sentiment reflected in a Jobs for the Future (JFF) analysis showing that 92 million U.S. workers are currently shut out of quality jobs and face systemic barriers to advancement. Click here to read more.
- From Manpower: With 61% of leaders saying their organizations will likely have layoffs this year, employers looking to support their exiting employees should not overlook the power of outplacement. Incorporating outplacement in their plans is critical for the exiting employee, the organization, and society as a whole. Outplacement is an invaluable resource for employees who have been laid off from their job. Individuals benefit from receiving support and guidance as they navigate the career transition process, which can be incredibly overwhelming. Click here to read more.
- From McKinsey & Company: As the world economy starts to emerge from the COVID-19 crisis, the time will soon come for leaders to look beyond safeguarding lives and livelihoods and to set their sights on a more profound challenge: bettering them. This societal challenge might be ten times as big as the pandemic and last ten times as long. The three goals we have in mind—growth, sustainability, and inclusion—buttress one another yet don’t always pull in the same direction; we see powerful reinforcing as well as counteracting loops among them (exhibit). And so, while many might agree on the aspiration, there’s a very tough question lurking in the background: How do we go about building a future that delivers growth, sustainability, and inclusion? - From the National Association of Colleges and Employers (NACE): How do you define a “reimagination”? Merriam-Webster defines “reimagined” as to “imagine again or anew; specially to form a new conception of or re-create.” In the current career services paradigm, reimaginings are complex and multilayered. In an ever-evolving landscape of education and work, career services professionals must adapt and innovate to guide individuals effectively on their professional journeys. With the backdrop of Kahlil Gibran's profound words in mind, we embark on a journey to reimagine career services for the future, weaving together insights from the realms of academia, practical expertise, and the wisdom of renowned professionals. - From the National Association of Counties (NACO): Criminal justice operates as an ecosystem, just like a forest, a coral reef, or a grassland. Law enforcement, court judges, court coordinators, the court clerk, public defenders, prosecutors, juvenile justice, child welfare, school districts and even financial services like bonding agencies all interact. That makes change hard, even when participants are willing and motivated, given the number of participants. Click here to read more.

- From the National Association of Workforce Boards (NAWB): In the dynamic landscape of the workforce, apprenticeships have emerged as a powerful tool for recruiting, training, and retaining skilled workers. Recognizing their effectiveness, local and state workforce boards across the United States are actively engaging with industries to leverage the apprenticeship system, aligning it with labor market needs. The National Association of Workforce Boards (NAWB) has been at the forefront of this movement, forging partnerships with various sectors to cultivate sustainable, diverse, and highly skilled workforces. - From the National Conference of State Legislatures: State legislators seeking to tackle housing or homelessness issues have a variety of policy levers to consider depending on their goal. For example, zoning and land use policy changes can improve the supply of housing, and reducing construction costs may help improve the affordability of rental housing. Expanding financing options could increase homeownership for low- and middle-income households, and establishing eviction alternatives is one way to increase housing stability and reduce homelessness. This collection of informational resources is a great starting point for understanding many aspects of housing and homelessness policy. Click

- From the National League of Cities (NLC): It's no secret that our nation is in the midst of a mental health crisis. According to the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration, about 1 in 5 American adults will experience a mental health condition in a given year. Rates of anxiety, depression and other mental health conditions are on the rise, as is demand for behavioral health professionals, who are frequently in short supply. And all of this impacts our workplaces and our local economies, because when left untreated, mental health conditions can lead to absenteeism, performance issues and people leaving the workforce entirely. Click here to read more.
- From the National Fund for Workforce Solutions: For the most part, other than their unusual ownership structure, employee-owned companies tend to be pretty "normal." Which is to say they usually have fairly typical organizational charts, management structures, etc. Their workforce needs are similarly typical, for the most part – they need employees with the right mix of technical, social, and critical thinking skills. But the fact that their employees are owners does distinguish them somewhat regarding their skill needs. Employee-owned companies need their workers to be able to think like owners because they are. They need more understanding of the company's workings than might be necessary at other companies; they need to be able to read and understand financial statements; they need to see the connections between their everyday activities and the company's performance. Click here to read more.
- From the National Skills Coalition: NSC began the year by releasing groundbreaking new research together with the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta that analyzed millions of "help wanted" ads. We found that 92 percent of jobs now require digital skills. The research found that demand for digital skills was robust across all industries – from the obvious such as the tech sector to unexpected industries like construction, or warehousing. Digital skills are in demand from entry-level positions to those that require years of experience. Previous research found that 1/3 of workers don't have the foundational digital skills necessary to enter and thrive in today's jobs. Together, the two findings shine a light on a digital skill divide that negatively affects workers, businesses, and our economy. The digital skill divide disproportionately impacts workers of color, low-income people, and rural residents due to historic underinvestment and structural inequities. Click here to read more.
- From Prosperity Now: Step Up Savannah is a nonprofit organization founded in response to stagnantly high multi-generational poverty in Georgia and the surrounding region. Central to the agency's work and outreach to the low-wealth community is its economic inclusion programming which includes workforce development, entrepreneurship incubation, public benefits cliff programming, financial literacy, and more. This month, Prosperity Now talked to Alicia Johnson, the Executive Director of Step Up Savannah, member of the Affordable Housing Network Steering Committee and Prosperity Now Community Champion to learn more about the agency's work and community impact. Click here to read more.

- From the Society for Human Resource Management (SHRM): Hiring was better than expected as 2023 came to a close, with employers adding 216,000 new positions in December, while the unemployment rate held at 3.7 percent, near historic lows, according to the latest jobs report from the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics. Economists' expectations for job gains in December had been around 170,000. Hiring was revised down for the rest of the fourth quarter of 2023, with payrolls in November falling from 199,000 to 173,000 and in October from 150,000 to 105,000. Click here to read more.
- From the U.S. Chamber of Commerce: We hear every day from our member companies—of every size and industry, across nearly every state—they're facing unprecedented challenges trying to find enough workers to fill open jobs. Right now, the latest data shows that we have 9.6 million job openings in the U.S., but only 6.4 million unemployed workers. We have a lot of jobs, but not enough workers to fill them. If every unemployed person in the country found a job, we would still have around 3 million open jobs. Click here to read more.
- From WorkforceGPS: All workforce and education programs operate within the context of a regional labor market. We have developed several training offerings that help you learn how to apply labor market information (LMI) to employment and training programs. Understanding the data available, and how it can be used, assists you in putting the data to work where you need to make planning and program design decisions. Click here to read more.
- From Workforce Monitor: In the hit dystopian TV series Severance, employees at biotech corporation Lumon Industries find it easy to separate work and home life. A computer chip is inserted in their brains to act as a "mindwipe." They leave all thoughts of home behind while at work, and completely forget about their work when at home. While the show explores the pitfalls of such a split in consciousness, there's no denying it's a tantalising prospect to be able to "flick the off switch" and forget about work whenever you're not actually supposed to be working. Click here to read more.
- From Workday: Across the globe, we're seeing organizations become increasingly reliant on contingent labor and more people are opting in to become part of the contingent workforce. Sapient Insights Group has found that 30%–40% of the global labor market is participating in some form of contingent work, with estimates rising to 50% or more within the next few years. As many as 30% of workers in some financial organizations can be identified as contingent labor and are expected to increase as dynamic workforce models become more common. Click here to read more.

- From WorkingNation: The demand for workers in the skilled trades is high with open positions going unfilled, according to the Associated Builders and Contractors (ABC), a trade association that represents the non-union construction industry. ABC notes the sector had more than 400,000 available jobs at the end of October. With members of the current workforce preparing for retirement, igniting the interest of young people in skilled trades careers is a challenge. Click here to read more.
- From WorkRise: Rising rents, ballooning credit card debt, and recent holiday expenses are all straining wallets as 2024 begins. Last month, more than half of US adults reported feeling stressed about either spending too much money or not having enough money. Research shows that this financial stress may be closely linked with worse psychological health, especially for those who are already disadvantaged in the labor market. Financial worries, defined as both perceptions of economic hardship and emotional responses to financial strain, are subjective measures of economic difficulties. They do not correspond directly with objective measures of finances, so two individuals with the same income may have different levels of financial worries depending on their spending habits and perceived job security. Financial worries may be more likely to cause psychological distress, including feelings of hopelessness and worthlessness, for certain populations based on variation in coping resource.
