

MAX MONDAYS: JULY 15, 2024

MAX Mondays provides a central place to stay abreast of the many workforce happenings in our region and state. Special thanks to everyone for your submittals and efforts to keep our workforce development community informed!

MAX Academy to Offer Credentialed Training in Helping Individuals Build Resilience: Do you serve individuals who have undergone some type of trauma at some point in their lives? If you are serving in the workforce development profession, it is highly likely that you do. And as we know, individuals who have experienced trauma may have difficulty in being resilient and achieving their productive potential without the support of trauma-informed care. Through our next MAX Academy, we will explore the concept of psychological safety as a tool to help build resilience in the clients you serve. We will explore the four stages of psychological safety and how you can create it when working with those who have experienced trauma and adverse childhood experiences (ACEs). REMINDER: MAX MEMBER BENEFIT: Earn National Certified Business Engagement Professional Credential at 25% Discount: Business U is offering a 25% discount to MAX members who register to join the Fall 2024 national training cohort which begins on September 12, 2024. MAX members save over $300 on earning a national business engagement credential! Back in 2018, MAX and Business U announced an exciting partnership to help make Business U's Certified Business Engagement Professional (CBEP) online course more accessible to Georgia-based workforce developers. Since the partnership began, nearly two dozen of our state's workforce developers have earned their CBEP credential through this course accredited by the International Association for Continuing Education and Training (IACET). - The Society for Human Resource Management (SHRM) is hosting an Employee Engagement is Dead webinar on Tuesday, July 23rd, starting at 2:00 PM. Year after year, employers face a common conundrum: how to increase employee engagement. A recent Gallup survey shows that employee engagement continues to drop from a high of 36 percent in 2020 to 30 percent today. As employers, you may be experiencing this in both direct and indirect ways. Maybe your people are leaving and directly expressing disengagement. Or there may be negative beliefs at play, keeping your people from connecting with the results you want them to both care about and own with accountability. In this webcast, you'll learn why cracking the engagement code requires "killing" employee engagement and why traditional measure for employee engagement no longer work. - The Society for Human Resource Management (SHRM) is hosting an HR at a Global Company in our Global Economy webinar on Tuesday, July 23rd, starting at 4:00 PM. Multinational employers face cross-border HR issues every day. And in today's globalized world, even local employers that do not directly operate abroad increasingly confront international employment issues (overseas telecommuting, for example). This fast-paced session offers an overview of all the HR issues that cross national borders—opening an overseas office, hiring foreign-based workers or engaging international contractors, HR professionals operating in a global context, and global work rules, handbooks and codes of conduct. In this program, Donald Dowling, an attorney and shareholder at Littler, provides an overview of how to adopt a global HR mindset. Click here to learn more and register.
- The Aspen Institute is hosting a webinar on Tapping into Worker Voice to Improve Job Quality: Lessons from the Talent Pipeline Management Network on Wednesday, July 24th, starting at 11:00 AM. Workforce intermediaries are uniquely positioned to help workers and businesses achieve mutually beneficial outcomes. Employers desire a workforce development approach that will address their most critical pain points, whereas workers seek opportunities to advance their economic security. In recent years, a wave of organizations has worked to take a “both-and” approach. These pioneers have recognized that job retention and recruitment are often linked to poor job quality, and that worker voice and input are critical to their ability to meet the demands of a dual-customer approach. In this webinar, we’ll hear from two members of the TPM network — the Kentucky Chamber of Commerce Foundation Workforce Center and the Kalamazoo Literacy Council — about how they have tapped into worker voice and worked with employers to drive job quality improvements. This event is part of the Economic Opportunities Program’s Job Quality in Practice series, which examines the strategies and approaches practitioners are using to improve job quality and expand economic opportunity. - REMI is hosting a webinar on the Economics of Offshore Wind Investment in California on Wednesday, July 24th, from 2:00 PM to 3:00 PM. Offshore wind is a clean renewable energy source that utilizes wind turbines to generate electricity for household/commercial use. Coastal wind farms have advantages over land-based ones, being located in areas with stronger airflow. They also provide short and long-term employment through construction and maintenance, as offshore farms are prone to destructive maritime weather that would further affect the price of energy in the economy. In our case study, we will look at how the installation of offshore wind along California's coast affects the regional economy. Our study will show the effects of offshore wind on utility prices, such as the short-term change in electricity prices, through an energy pricing model. Electricity price can be based on the size of a wind farm project and the supply of external energy. Furthermore, the E3+ model will gauge the effects of a change in carbon consumption and an increase of clean energy use, leading to forecasts that measure the influence of carbon tax and long-term renewable electricity that is a result of renewable wind. - The Society for Human Resource Management (SHRM) is hosting a webinar on Creating an Onboarding Experience That Drives Retention, Engagement, and Fulfillment on Tuesday, July 30th, starting at 2:00 PM. Did you know that 69 percent of new hires are more likely to stay with a company for at least three years if they have a great onboarding experience? Onboarding sets the tone for an employee’s experience with you. It creates an ideal foundation that encourages employees to stay. Think about this sobering stat from Gallup: Organizations lose a third to two thirds of new hires in the first 12 months, even for senior-level positions. And half of hourly workers leave after just four months. The bottom line? New employees need to feel valued and appreciated and they need a sense of belonging to their new company. Are you doing enough to welcome, prepare and connect your new employees? In this webcast, you'll learn the importance of a comprehensive and ongoing onboarding experience and discover easy ways to help your new employees feel excited, connected, and prepared. - The Society for Human Resource Management (SHRM) is hosting a webinar on Improving Your Workforce Quality of Care Via Smart Provider Navigation on Wednesday, July 31st, starting at 2:00 PM. Choosing a physician can be a daunting task for consumers due to the increasing complexity of plans and the multitude of options available, which can complicate the decision-making process. Traditionally, members have depended on referrals from various sources, but these do not always align with their specific network, benefits, plan, or health requirements. Moreover, referrals do not guarantee cost-effective, quality care. Efforts by employers to establish quality networks or designation programs have fallen short, often due to a lack of personalization and decision-support tools. In the upcoming webcast, hear from esteemed speakers Rahul Rehani, Exec Director, Commercial Product, Jen Jacobs AVP, Data Science, and David Chand, Senior Medical Director of Clinical Quality for Aetna. - The Aspen Institute is hosting a webinar on Seizing the Moment on Worker Rights: A Toolkit for Organizers and Practitioners on Wednesday, September 4th, starting at 2:00 PM. Today’s politicized environment poses unique challenges for worker rights advocates. With Congress often divided, and many state and local governments as well, the path to improving worker rights through legislation is narrow. Nonetheless, we have seen some remarkable progress on worker rights over the last few years through executive action. Leveraging executive action, however, is not a straightforward and easily discernible path for grassroots activists and organizations interested in advancing worker rights and job quality. This webinar co-hosted by the Aspen Institute Economic Opportunities Program and Workshop — will feature a panel of experienced public servants and organizers. Speakers will dive into the lessons and stories from Toolkit and provide guidance to advocates and organizers striving to advance worker rights. This event is part of the Economic Opportunities Program’s Job Quality in Practice series, which examines the strategies and approaches practitioners are using to improve job quality and expand economic opportunity. Click here to learn more and register via Zoom.

- From Accenture: Thanks to this advisor ability, generative AI offers a wealth of applications for deal teams. In deal sourcing, teams can get AI assistance in developing investment theses and portfolio optimization and diversification. During the due diligence phase, AI can assist with risk assessment and competitive analysis, allowing teams to spend more time on deeper analysis, scenario builds and value creation plans. The possibilities stretch across the deal lifecycle through to monitoring portfolio performance, anticipating exit readiness and identifying potential buyers. Click here to read more.
- From The Annie E. Casey Foundation: The COVID-19 pandemic led to school closures, virtual instruction and increased social isolation, causing concerns about student learning loss and declines in school connection. While some indicators bear out these concerns with drops in student reading and math proficiency, and a spike in chronic absenteeism, 2022 high school graduation rates signal promising signs of early pandemic recovery. Data by race and ethnicity, though, show enduring educational inequities for students of color, particularly for American Indian or Alaska Native students. To address inequities and ensure a full recovery from the pandemic, schools and communities can strengthen partnerships on comprehensive approaches to support student success, especially for vulnerable students. This includes bolstering systems in and outside of schools to address diverse student needs, from education and family needs to emotional and physical health issues. Click here to read more.
- From The Aspen Institute: Weavers show that, by starting with a vision built on strength, treating everyone as a leader, and centering on strengthening relationships, Americans can weave a new social fabric built on trust. Weavers show us that a more united America is within reach, and perhaps even closer than we think. They teach us that one of the most awesome powers of a community may just be its ability to cultivate effective leaders from within. Click here to read more.
- From Brookings: AI systems raise an interesting set of questions regarding trade secrets, because they can generate economically valuable information that was not originally in the possession of their human designers. Consider an AI system used by a pharmaceutical company to develop new drugs. Suppose that the AI system identifies a formula for potential new drug that it deems to be highly promising. At that moment in time—after the AI system has identified the formula but before any of the people who work at the pharmaceutical company have learned of it from the AI system, what are some reasons why the formula should qualify as a trade secret? - From Center for American Progress: Within the cement and concrete industry, companies and scientists are working hard to develop new low- and zero-emission manufacturing processes that have the potential to transform this highly polluting industry. Bringing these innovative solutions to the scale necessary to reach net-zero emissions by 2050 will require further research, development, and ambitious investments and policies worldwide. The United States has made progress in funding innovative solutions that eliminate both process emissions released in limestone calcination and energy-associated emissions. While only a few of these companies are currently producing at a commercial scale, their progress shows multiple technology pathways to decarbonize the sector, and the DOE grants allocated in the past few years will help accelerate their operations and keep costs competitive. In addition, policymakers should enact and expand policies to reduce emissions from cement and concrete, including public procurement policies such as “Buy Clean,” tax policies that incentivize clean materials, and standards for carbon intensity or embodied emissions of cement products. - From Economic Policy Institute: Unemployment rates today are comparable to 2019. Sustained low unemployment over the last 2.5 years has disproportionately benefited Black workers who have lower unemployment now than in 2019, leading to a slow narrowing of the persistent Black-white unemployment gap. Hispanic workers experience lower unemployment than Black workers in general, but their rates are now slightly above their 2019 level. Young adults are experiencing similar unemployment as before the pandemic. Click here to read more.
- From FedCommunities: While these overlapping problems might seem intractable, the fact that they concentrate in neighborhoods presents an opportunity. For example, combining resources and ideas from those working on solutions in all three sectors can help communities overcome all three problems at once. And while joining forces from discrete workstreams may sound expensive and complicated, the reality is that states can save money in the process and unleash potential in underinvested places. This integrated strategy for addressing climate, health, and economic vulnerabilities is more just, cost-effective, and efficient. It’s also healthier for people and better for the environment. - From the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta: For some workers, career advancement and higher pay can trigger a loss of means-tested public assistance. Workers may struggle to plan for that loss due to the complexity of public assistance rules and a lack of projections about their income and expenses. The Atlanta Fed designed the Career Ladder Identifier and Financial Forecaster (CLIFF) tools to help workers make more informed financial decisions about job training and employment in the context of public assistance loss and paying for basic expenses such as housing, childcare, and health care. This discussion paper presents the findings from a two-year study of CLIFF implementation by 23 organizations in 13 states. Through the analysis of interview and focus group transcripts, we find three overarching themes related to implementation: 1) identifying the appropriate population of users for CLIFF; 2) integrating CLIFF into existing organization operations; and 3) integrating CLIFF into coaching sessions. These themes along with the associated subthemes suggest ways that organizations can more effectively incorporate public assistance calculators into existing financial and career coaching contexts. - From Gallup Workplace Insights: Amid these concerning enrollment trends, Gallup finds that overall confidence in the higher education industry remains at a record low, while the percentage of Americans with very little confidence in higher education is at an all-time high. Lower confidence ratings in four-year institutions and concerns about the cost and value of the degrees they provide may partially explain these declining ratings in the higher education industry in general. - From Jobs for the Future: High-quality pathways prepare students for good jobs—but what do we really mean by that? JFF’s Quality Jobs Framework provides an expanded definition of quality jobs, highlighting job characteristics all workers deserve in addition to good pay and benefits, such as flexibility, autonomy, stability, and advancement opportunities. By examining national data, we explore what measures of job quality the technology sector is strong in and where it could stand to improve. With a growing demand for more technology roles and skills and a shortage of qualified workers leading to the emergence of more technology pathways, we explore this question: Does the technology sector pass our new definition of job quality? - From Manpower: The rapid progress in large language models and generative AI technology has been a driving force behind the surge in AI agent capabilities. Today’s AI swarm agents are capable of making decisions and acting independently, therefore changing the game when it comes to integration of AI with conventional IT infrastructures. AI swarm agents can interact with a wide array of systems and services, and because they can be deployed by the millions and even billions to tackle a given challenge collectively, they can perform tasks traditionally done by humans on a much larger scale. In an era of persisting labor shortages, it’s critical that staffing organizations learn to use technologies such as AI swarm agents to recruit and develop top talent faster and more effectively than we have in the past. - From McKinsey & Company: Today, insurance industry CROs are facing multiple demands from both relatively well-known and new risks. Industry leaders are resisting short-term actions and are instead focusing on the financial and nonfinancial risks that matter most, making selective investments in capabilities such as advanced analytics and gen AI. CROs, working with the CEO, the full executive team, as well as the board’s audit and risk committees, are also building proper emerging-risk identification capabilities, fostering a culture of innovation, enhancing strategic agility and resilience, and prioritizing the management of technology. All of this is in service of protecting the firm, its customers, its employees, and in the end, its shareholders. While risks are ultimately owned by the first line of defense, the CROs—whether they have been in the seat for long or are new to the role—are playing a more strategic role than they did just five years ago. We expect this trend to accelerate. Click here to read more.

- From the National Association of Counties (NACO): “As families started to access and receive these services, we started to see their needs come down, and our community health ultimately improved,” Huberty said. “The services are out there, but sometimes when they’re in that state of crisis and state of panic, they just need someone to help them get there before they have that major life event. “But usually what happens systemically is we can’t be involved, we can’t help [before a crisis]. - From the National Conference of State Legislatures: These students had a hard time imagining they could ever go to college, but they each found at least one adult in their lives who helped them. For some, it was a teacher who invited them to eat lunch in their classroom; others found a guidance counselor or a therapist through a state or school program. And all of them say the mentorship through SchoolHouse Connection has been vital. Jordyn Roark, the organization’s director of youth leadership and scholarships, says the students’ stories illustrate the powerful effect that a caring adult can have in young people’s lives. “Some of my (scholarship) students live in states that have really stellar resources, and they do really well,” Roark says. “(But) I hate to think that the state a student is born in, the school that a student attends, determines their fate.” She urged the lawmakers to “figure out what resources are available in their states and what you can replicate within your own.” Click here to read more.
- From the National League of Cities (NLC): Clean water infrastructure needs, including wastewater treatment and water quality improvements, total $630.1 billion nationally over the next 20 years. Similarly, the national drinking water infrastructure needs represent another $625 billion. Unprecedented levels of funding under the Bipartisan Infrastructure Law (BIL), federal grants, and State Revolving Funds (SRFs) offer increased support for water infrastructure challenges. - From the National Fund for Workforce Solutions: Balancing work and childcare responsibilities is a daunting task for many employees. The demands of parenting coupled with professional commitments often lead to stress and decreased productivity. According to the Center for American Progress, the difficulty of finding reliable and affordable childcare is a significant issue for many working parents. This struggle can lead to absenteeism, decreased job satisfaction, and high turnover rates. Click here to read more.

- From the National Skills Coalition: In the Senate’s WIOA reauthorization bill, there are slight improvements in local board makeup compared to ASWA, which lacked mandatory changes to board composition or state/local plans. The Senate version introduces “standing committees” to advise on issues like youth employment, workers with disabilities, and reentry populations, each requiring representation from individuals with lived experience. However, these committees are advisory only and not mandatory, supplementing existing advisory structures on many workforce boards. A more impactful and equitable approach would be to mandate compensation for workers with specific lived experiences on local boards. Click here to read more.
- From Prosperity Now: As we look back on April’s Second Chance Month, it is important to remember that every year, more than 600,000 people are released from prison and given a chance to build a new life. Discriminatory hiring practices and other barriers often present obstacles to securing stable employment. In fact, nearly 75% of formerly incarcerated people are still unemployed a year after their release. Click here to read more.
- From the Society for Human Resource Management (SHRM): Summer jobs are traditionally a source of employment for younger workers. Bunker noted that May data from the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics showed that while teen employment has held steady in recent months, jobs for workers ages 20-24 have declined. He added that the disconnect might be explained by the divergence between traditional summer jobs such as lifeguards and camp counselors—which are generally attractive to teens—and corporate internships and entry-level jobs, which are typically more attractive to workers in their early 20s. - From the U.S. Chamber of Commerce: The advantages of achieving growth are evident, yet frequently, the route to revitalizing growth is neglected. Finding a way to increase growth should be the key focus of all policymakers. Through the November elections and beyond, the Chamber will outline policies that will help us reach the goal of 3% annual real economic growth. Click here to read more.
- From Workforce Monitor: Growing numbers of reporters and editors, tired of waiting for the other shoe to drop, are exiting the profession, citing burnout as the reason for their departure. When scholars of journalism study the effects of the shrinking press corps, they usually focus on how it hurts civil society. Vast swaths of the country are at risk of becoming “news deserts,” with limited access to reliable local journalism. This state of affairs makes it harder for people to make educated decisions and is linked to reduced political engagement, research shows. What’s more, fewer reporters means less oversight of those wielding political and economic power. Click here to read more.

- From Workday: While there are continued challenges, including a still-tight labor market and trade uncertainty, manufacturers are also feeling more optimistic in recent months. In the National Association of Manufacturers' (NAM) latest Manufacturers' Outlook Survey, 68.7% of respondents reported feeling positive about their company's outlook. That's still lower than the historical average, but 2.5% higher than in December 2023. To overcome challenges and capitalize on growth opportunities, many manufacturers are feeling bullish about digitization—understandable considering that 83% believe smart factory solutions will transform the way products are made in 5 years, according to Deloitte. - From WorkingNation: The learners who stand to gain the most from short-term programs are also more likely to require financial support. Indeed, those who pursue short-term credentials are disproportionately students of color or from low-income backgrounds. Without the means to pay for these programs, their flexibility and relevancy count for very little. For these students, access to Pell Grants remains essential. After years of extensive debate and discussion, lawmakers have never been closer to making this meaningful change a reality. By extending Pell to cover short-term programs, they can better align postsecondary education with both the needs of learners and the real-world demands of the workforce. - From WorkRise: A new project from the Urban Institute finds that while clean energy jobs are more likely to be high quality (or offer better wages, benefits, and job security) compared with the overall labor market, women and people of color are underrepresented in the potential clean energy workforce. Our analysis also finds that high-quality jobs in clean energy are generally in the following occupations: engineering and architecture; management; installation, maintenance, and repair; and construction and extraction. To advance equity in the clean energy workforce, communities could work with universities, employers, and unions to address barriers to high-quality jobs and help women and people of color access higher education and workforce development opportunities.
