MAX MONDAYS: APRIL 27, 2026

MAX Mondays provides a central place to stay abreast of the many workforce happenings in our region and state. Special thanks to everyone for your submittals and efforts to keep our workforce development community informed!

REMINDER: MAX Announces Speaker Lineup for MAX Academy on Mastering

Apprenticeships, Presented by Google: Apprenticeships are a proven, high-impact workforce strategy that align education with real-world industry needs. By combining paid, hands-on training with structured classroom instruction, apprenticeships create clear pathways to skilled careers while enabling employers to develop talent tailored to their specific workforce demands. Through this MAX Academy, we will learn about the ins and outs of building successful apprenticeship and pre-apprenticeship programs from colleagues with the Technical College System of Georgia (TCSG) as well as colleagues with technical colleges in metro Atlanta, community-based workforce providers, and employers who have administered successful programs linking job seekers to better career pathways. MAX ALERT: U.S. Department of Labor Launches Inaugural Spring National Apprenticeship

Week: National Apprenticeship Week (NAW) is a nationwide event where partners—such as employers, educators, government agencies, and workforce organizations—host activities to highlight how Registered Apprenticeships build a skilled workforce, support industry needs, and create career pathways into in-demand jobs. The initiative is coordinated through the U.S. Department of Labor and this year, USDOL launches its inaugural Spring NAW to be held from Sunday, April 26 to Saturday, May 2, 2026. - The Georgia Center for Nonprofits is hosting a Certificate of Strategic Storytelling for Nonprofits starting on Wednesday, May 6th, from 1:00 PM to 4:30 PM. Since humankind began, stories have been our primary method for sharing information. Stories help us to understand complex issues, allow us to develop and celebrate shared values, and encourage us to cultivate empathy for one another. We remember the stories we connect to – the ones that elicit powerful emotions – far more easily and completely than even the most carefully crafted talking points or data. That's why storytelling is often promoted as a "magic bullet" remedy for all our engagement, fundraising, and donor retention woes. But nonprofit staff working on the front lines know just how challenging it can be to attempt effective storytelling on top of all the other demands that come with running a nonprofit organization. Through this brand-new four-part series, nonprofit communicators and fundraisers will learn how busy teams can craft and share powerful, uplifting, and – most importantly – ethical stories about the people they serve, the work they do, and the impact of their volunteers, advocates, and donors. - Brookings is hosting a webinar on Raising Young Children in an AI World on Monday, April 27th, from 2:00 PM to 3:00 PM. The first generation of children growing up with artificial intelligence is already here. From AI-enabled toys to generative learning and communication tools, these technologies are reaching children during the earliest and most formative years of life—from birth to 8 years—when relationships, play, language, and health shape the foundations for lifelong learning and well-being. The question is no longer whether AI will shape childhood, but how to ensure it does so in ways that support healthy development from the very beginning while preserving the core of what makes us human. During this session, the Center for Universal Education at Brookings will host a panel discussion to examine what it means to raise young children in an AI world. As the first event in the Generation AI Starts Early webinar series, the discussion will bring together leading experts in early childhood development to explore what young children need to thrive, the potential risks of AI entering their lives, and how parents and caregivers can navigate an increasingly complex technological landscape. Through a moderated conversation, the speakers will share insights from research and practice, offering practical guidance and highlighting the aspects of early childhood development that must remain fundamentally human. WORKFORCE DEVELOPMENT INSIGHTS

Recent Articles

- From Accenture: Most manufacturers concentrate AI efforts on operations and maintenance, where data is richest and ROI is easiest to prove. That focus misses the bigger opportunity. Manufacturing value accrues across the full plant lifecycle, from design through construction, commissioning, ramp-up and decades of operation. An AI program targeting only the operating phase is likely to stall. Fragmented data, unclear ownership and workforces not yet designed for AI are not late-stage problems; they run through the entire lifecycle. Click here to read more.
- From The Annie E. Casey Foundation: The Jim Casey Fellowship is open to young people who have completed the Foundation's Youth Leadership Institute (YLI). Jim Casey Initiative network sites, and other local organizations that serve older youth with foster care experience, nominate young leaders who are involved in local advocacy efforts to attend YLI. During the five-day institute, participants immerse themselves in principles of authentic youth engagement to effectively advocate for their well-being and their peers. The training also strengthens their understanding of how data can support child welfare advocacy and deepens their knowledge of child welfare policies and practices. Click here to read more.
- From The Aspen Institute: After decades of critique that shareholder primacy is eating our seed corn, it's time for a real breakthrough in the US. We the public grant business the license to operate, and we need corporations at the table to address global and national issues of real consequence. This includes the need to rapidly advance the energy transition and address climate change, protect consumers, labor, and human rights, and develop business protocols on the use of technology, including AI and social media. Click here to read more.
- From Brookings: As policymakers and industry leaders around the world work to develop governance solutions to keep pace with AI development and deployment, they face a shared fundamental challenge: effective governance relies on the ability to measure. Any system of accountability, liability, or oversight depends on a reliable and scalable way of understanding what AI systems are capable of and verifying that they are fit for purpose. Without robust measurement tools, many claims about the capabilities, risks, and impacts of AI can be difficult to verify independently. Click here to read more.

- From Center for American Progress: State climate action is moving beyond long-term goals to real-time decisions about clean energy deployment and cost allocation, pollution reduction, electrification, and accountability. The actions advancing across states aim to address questions such as who pays for the grid, whether renters can access solar, whether communities near warehouses breathe cleaner air, whether low-income households can keep the lights on, and whether the companies responsible for decades of fossil fuel emissions will contribute to the cost of recovery. Click here to read more.
- From Center on Budget and Policy Priorities: Federal lawmakers must act now to give states the time and resources they need to improve payment accuracy while protecting access to food assistance for eligible low-income households struggling to afford groceries. Congress should start by delaying the cost-sharing requirement for food benefits for all states — not just the states with the highest error rates — and postponing cuts to federal funding for states’ administrative costs. A bipartisan coalition representing governors, state legislatures, and other state and local officials is calling on Congress to do just that. Click here to read more.
- From Economic Policy Institute: Rural districts have the most to lose when states enact voucher programs. For rural communities, vouchers are not a cost-free policy that simply expands education options for children—they are a subsidy for wealthy urban and suburban families at the expense of strong public schools. Voucher programs also introduce a large potential cost for the students that remain in rural public schools. The public spending declines associated with the introduction of vouchers will reliably cause significantly worse educational outcomes at a time when states should be spending more—not less—on public schools. Click here to read more.
- From FedCommunities: In a semiannual survey of nonprofit organizations, most respondents reported a decline in their clients’ financial well-being over the past six months due to elevated prices. One respondent said more people sought foreclosure prevention services amid rising property taxes and insurance, while a homeless shelter operator observed longer stays due to the lack of affordable housing. Some respondents who assist jobseekers noticed fewer entry-level positions available. By contrast, others noted more openings for low-paying jobs—manual labor, part-time or temporary jobs, and gig work—that typically lack health-care benefits or a reliable income. Click here to read more.
- From the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta: On employment, most firms held head count steady or hired only to replace departing workers. Turnover remained low, and there were few reports of layoffs. At the same time, most companies cited a return to prepandemic wage increases of from 2 percent to 4 percent. However, contacts reported that competition for workers increased wages more swiftly in certain jobs in healthcare, warehousing, and skilled trades. Lower- and middle-income consumers continued to face significant pressure. Retailers continued to see widespread trading down from pricier to cheaper products, and food banks and other support agencies noted more requests for assistance. Click here to read more.

- From Gallup Workplace Insights: Use of AI in the workplace continues to expand across the U.S. workforce, with half of employees now reporting that they use artificial intelligence at least a few times a year in their role. As adoption of AI in business grows, employees in organizations implementing AI are also more likely to report disruption and workforce changes. Many organizations are still adjusting how they organize work and manage staffing as AI becomes more common. Click here to read more.
- From the International Association of Workforce Professionals (IAWP): Interviews are another area where our assumptions haven't caught up. We treat them as the central test of a candidate's ability. But interviews are inconsistent, often unstructured, and heavily influenced by communication style and confidence. In many roles, they reward how well someone can talk about work more than how well they can actually do it. Some employers are moving toward skills assessments and work samples, but our preparation models are still anchored in answering questions rather than demonstrating capability. Click here to read more.
- From Jobs for the Future: Over the past several decades, the default response to deep structural problems in education and career preparation has been to add more programs: college access initiatives, career academies, short-term credentials, mentoring schemes, and new grant-funded pilots. Each may do real good for a subset of students, but together they have produced a proliferation of disconnected initiatives layered on top of an architecture that has barely changed. At JPMorganChase, we strive to increase efficiency, lower costs, and reduce waste throughout our global real estate portfolio, which supports more than 300,000 employees operating in 66 countries. From our corporate offices – including our new Manhattan headquarters – to Chase branches and data centers, we aim to create healthy, efficient, and responsible spaces for our employees, customers, and communities. - From Manpower: Two parallel forces dominate the engineering sphere right now. Like much of the economy, the field is no longer in a general slowdown. Engineering-related industries have turned the page and are in a fragile recovery period. But as organizations return to staffing demanding projects at a rapid clip, they face talent scarcity. We simply aren't training enough engineering professionals globally to account for increased demand. Click here to read more.
- From McKinsey & Company: The education financing challenge is too large—and too urgent—to be met through grants alone. While grant-making will remain essential, particularly for advocacy, innovation, and equity, it can be complemented by a broader tool kit. By deploying innovative financing mechanisms, philanthropy can punch far above its weight: mobilizing new capital, improving accountability for outcomes, and accelerating progress toward universal, high-quality education. - From the National Association of Colleges and Employers (NACE): The average intern conversion rate is the highest it has been in five years. The conversion rate has surged to 63.1% for 2024-25 interns, a steep climb of nearly 13% from the rate for 2023-24 interns. Other key metrics for internship programs—namely offer and acceptance rates—increased as well. The offer rate climbed nearly 10% from 2023-24, while the acceptance rate reached 88.3% among 2024-25 interns, up from 82.8% for their 2023-24 counterparts. Click here to read more.
- From the National Association of Counties (NACO): The SBHC grant program provides competitive funding to support the establishment and operation of school-based health centers. Grants can be used to acquire or lease equipment, support workforce training, pay staff salaries and cover operational and management costs. The program prioritizes communities facing significant barriers to care, including areas with high rates of uninsured children. SBHCs are a critical access point for care, particularly for students who may not otherwise receive regular medical services. Click here to read more.
- From the National Association of Workforce Boards (NAWB): If you follow the daily news cycle, the electric vehicle (EV) industry can seem like a rollercoaster. Between shifting federal investments, political debates, and fluctuating automaker commitments, it is easy to wonder about the true state of the EV economy. But when we tune out the noise and look at the actual labor market data, a much clearer, undeniable reality emerges: The EV mobility market is not just a speculative future endeavor—it is here, it is massive, and it is critically starved for skilled talent. - From the National Conference of State Legislatures: A sweeping reorganization of the U.S. Forest Service signals that the agency is planning to lean heavily on states to help manage millions of acres of federal land. State officials and timber industry leaders say they've been given scant details about the plan, which will move the agency's headquarters from Washington, D.C., to Salt Lake City, restructure its regional management, and close scores of research stations in dozens of states. While they wait for the dust to settle, they're preparing for the Forest Service to ask more of its partners under the new model. Click here to read more.

- From the National League of Cities (NLC): The improvements in rail safety are not accidental — they are the result of a highly skilled workforce and key investments that are improving rail operations through new tools. Advanced systems such as automated track inspection, detectors and real-time monitoring are helping railroad workers identify issues before they become incidents. Positive Train Control (PTC), which has been fully deployed across 57,536 required route miles since 2000, is specifically designed to prevent certain types of serious accidents. Click here to read more.
- From the National Fund for Workforce Solutions: Our childcare sector has been chronically underfunded for years. Educators in this space love their work and often subsidize classrooms with their own money and work long hours with low pay. This reliance on their passion rather than fair compensation is especially unbalanced, as over 90 percent of early care professionals are women and more than a third are people of color. Investing in quality jobs for early childhood educators is not just about strengthening a workforce. It is critical to ensuring that families have access to high-quality and reliable care options. Click here to read more.
- From the National Skills Coalition: The AI economy is here — and it's not just changing the way we look for a doctor, pay for a parking meter, or navigate daily life. It's beginning to reshape how people do their jobs. In the next few years, AI's impact on the labor market will accelerate. The question isn't whether or when AI will change the economy, but who will benefit and who will bear the cost. If AI hasn't affected your job yet, it will soon. But AI won't affect every job in the same way. Some roles will disappear, others will change, and still others will experience a boom. Click here to read more.
- From Prosperity Now: For many families, tax season is one of the most important financial moments of the year. A refund can mean catching up on rent, paying down debt, covering childcare, or finally having a small buffer that helps households stay financially stable during uncertain times. Filing taxes takes time, costs money, and can be confusing. For the 2024 tax year, Americans spent billions of hours and hundreds of billions of dollars navigating the tax system. On average, people spent about 13 hours and $300 just to file. For households already managing tight budgets, that is a real barrier. It can also mean missing out on credits they have already earned. Click here to read more.

- From the Society for Human Resource Management (SHRM): At the recent WorldatWork Total Rewards Conference in San Antonio, conversations about artificial intelligence — and its place in compensation and benefits — were everywhere. In one panel session April 20, the message wasn't just that AI is starting to be used in the benefits field; it was that employees are already using the tech when it comes to benefits, whether employers are ready or not. It's a reality that's forcing HR leaders to rethink how benefits are delivered, communicated, and managed — and one that's causing employers to embrace their own AI tools. Click here to read more.
- From the Urban Institute: As technology advances at an unprecedented pace, the demand for skilled workers in the tech sector who can adapt to ever-changing industry needs has never been greater. While tech employment is projected to grow up to twice the rate of overall employment in the next decade, the industry faces a retention problem. This brief explores how apprenticeships can improve retention outcomes by examining data on apprenticeships and the tech workforce. Click here to read more.
- From the U.S. Chamber of Commerce: We welcome the introduction of comprehensive legislation that would establish a single national privacy standard, building upon state privacy frameworks with proven, strong consumer protections developed on a bipartisan basis. A clear nationwide standard would strengthen trust, help individuals exercise meaningful control over their information, and give businesses the certainty needed to innovate, protect data, and drive growth. - From Workday: Each year across the United States, more than 200,000 service members transition from military life to the civilian workforce, carrying with them exceptional capabilities honed in high-stakes, mission-driven environments. They bring their technical skills, but more importantly, they bring a level of leadership, adaptability, and grit that is essential to the modern workforce. Yet for many veterans, the transition is met with a language gap, where their military experience doesn't always align with civilian job descriptions, making it difficult for hiring teams to recognize their full potential. Click here to read more.
- From Workforce Monitor: U.S. staffing companies employed an average of two million temporary and contract workers per week in the fourth quarter of 2025, according to data released today by the American Staffing Association—up by 65,000 workers from the third quarter. A decline in year-to-year total staffing employment narrowed to 6.1% in the fourth quarter, an improvement from a year-to-year decline of 7.5% recorded in

- From WorkingNation: There's no single definition of rural America. Some rural communities are a small, but bustling, town center surrounded by vast swatches of farm land. Other communities are mountainous with a few homes and businesses scattered about the region. What they have in common is a population that wants to live and work in a community that offers a slower pace of life, one with financial stability. Providing quality jobs is key to making that happen. It takes a coalition of partners to make it work. While the number of U.S. farms continues a slow decline, and with tech playing an expanding role in all industries, the rural American job market is diversifying. The shift from traditional agricultural jobs towards manufacturing, clean energy, and health care is creating new opportunities that can provide that economic mobility and security. MAX PROVIDER PORTAL

The MAX Provider Portal was launched in 2014 to help local leaders gain a better understanding of metro Atlanta's workforce ecosystem – namely, who is doing what, where, and for whom. The portal provides the most comprehensive picture of our workforce ecosystem. Providers in the portal can share information on the populations and geographies they serve, the services (job search & placement, postemployment services, supportive services, and soft skills training) they provide, the specific occupations and industries they support, and more. The MAX Provider Council oversees and informs the ongoing development of the MAX Provider Portal. Click here to access the MAX Provider Portal. If your organization is not already represented in the MAX Provider Portal, click here to get on the map today.

MAX RESOURCE LIBRARY

The MAX Resource Library is a central clearinghouse for reports, studies, data tools, websites, online portals, and other sources of information related to workforce development to keep workforce partners informed. From data on workforce trends and barriers to the latest on the skills gap and economic mobility, a wealth of information is at your fingertips through this clearinghouse. Resources can be added to the MAX Resource Library through the recommendation of MAX members. The MAX Data Council oversees and informs the ongoing development of the MAX Resource Library.
